It is not necessary to go into the shocking and brutal details, and for their own peace of mind we recommend our renders not to study them minutely. They are calculated to depress one's spirits, and give a gloomy outlook for the future of the country.

But the frequency of red-handed murder ought to incite a spirit of inquiry into causes. There must be some hing lacking in our social and civil systems; a want of reverence for anthority, perhaps, and too light a regard for the value of human life, and the serious consequences of taking it by violence. We do not pretend to analyze the cause of such terrible resuls; we only recogvize the facts of daily ocentrence. Whether a prompter and more severe enforcement of the law will tend to arrest blood-hed is donbtful. Executions have been more numerous during the past six weeks than in as many previous months, but the torrent of bleed is not abated. Perhaps we shall have better results further along. Hanging as a remedy for murder has not been thoroughly tried. We should like to see the murderers strung up in good style from this to the end of June next, anyhow, as an experiment.

FROM COL. L. T. FOSTER.

Youngstown, Ohio, May 10, 1886.

Dg. B. J. KENDALL, & Co., Gents :—I had a very valuable Hamble onlon coll which I prized very highly, he had a very large bone spavin on one joint and a small one on the other which made him very tame. I had him under the charge of two venerinary surgeons, who falled to exac him. I was one day reading the advertisement of Kendall's Spavin Cure in the tameage Express, I determined at once to try it and got our druggists here to send for il. They ordered these bottles: I took them all and thought I would give it a thought bright in a did to be laine, and the fourth day the colt crassed to be laine, and the fourth day the colt crassed to be laine, and the fourth day the colt crassed to be laine, and the fourth day the colt substance. I used but one bottle and the colts limbs are as free from lumps and as smooth as any horse in the State. He is entirely cured. The cure was so remarkable that Let two of my neighbors have the remaining two boitles, who are now using it.

Very Repsectfully,

INHUMANITY.

It must be admitted, that this is, indeed, a progressive age. But, that of itself is not sufficient to exait it above all the past. If it should appear that the thorns and chaff are keeping equal pace with the wheat and roses, then the prospect of a fruitful outcome might be too flattering. No doubt, in the fifteenth century, the magnificent splendor of Spanish discovery and conquest must have dilated the proud heart of the Spaniard; and as he drove the gallant, resolate Moor from his marble palaces and rich treasure, the thought that the age in which he lived was like unto no other age-that the world had never before attained its present peer of excellence, must have continually haunted his mind. He despised the profound wisdom of those he had subjugated, derided their scientific discoveries and carnest researches; to him there was simply one way of interpreting the world, and that was from the standpoint of his own bigotry. To him all things were made to undergo the inspection of a single lense with a very No doubt there was much to make the heart of the Castilian beat high. and but for his servitude to one idea, perhaps, the marble halls of the Albambra might to-day echo the superior wisdom and advanced condition of a naturally generous and light-hearted

But I have said this, not because it is it is not generally known, rather, because there is a spirit much analogous now. The one dominant idea now seems to be, the fixed determination to annihitate the old. All things must be ew: unless they bear the late impress, exhale the novel odor, or can be made to take on the proper bue, they must be cast aside as the moss-grown fancies of olden times.

Among some of these lamented decay, may be mentioned a lack of sympathy for beasts of burden, unkindness to dumb brutes of whatsoever kind. I HOVES. to dumb brutes of whatsoever kind. I "unrestrained freedom" means to liberate the passions and appetites of mankind as well, let us return a while to "the old." If the invention of laborsaving machines tends to inculcate that flesh and blood are as destitute of feeling as bars of steel and bolts of iron, let us go back awhile to the shovel and the hoe. At least, if there are men who heavy split timber, applying the lash to his poor, half-fed team, which were straining every muscle in vain to increase their gait,-if there must be such tion of people of sensibility. In the first place, no man has a right, because a mule, a horse, or a cow, belongs to him, to vent his perverted, depraved nature upon them. In the second place, __ he has no right to harrow the feelingor insult the human sympathy of a sing le individual who may be unfortunate enough to witness the corrupt hardness of his heart. In the streets of our own village such outrages have been perpetrated as would excite the righteons indignation, or arouse the holy wrath of every kindly disposed person.

It is "devoutly to be wished" that every good citizen will speak out, and put these imposers upon the higher feelings of the community to shame; let them feel they are vastly in the minority, and their deeds of darkness will not be tolerated. The truth is, this open violation of all human decency is only indicative of what transpires "behind the scenes," and in the household as well as the barnyard. The man who will abuse his family. While he may take a put these imposers upon the higher feelings his family. While he may take a club to the one, which his fear of the law would prevent him from taking to the other, yet his harsh ungoverned temper wid find expression, if not in blows, in words that wound deeper and sing harder. Let the young lady beware, who finds her escort in a buggyride unmerciful and brutish to the horses. And ten-fold more let the young man beware, who has the reins taken from his hand by the young lady, and the horses driven to desperation over miles of hilly country.

It cannot but be a source of regret that this progressive age should also, be found to progress in barbarism. We nced not congratulate ourselves upon our a cendency over the times long past, until we have, at least, sustained the level of their moral standing. It is to be hoped that the time will speedily come when we may innocent y walk upon our 'streets without fear of encountering sights which horrity our better
